SERPENT of the LAKE!

STORY-M. PELLOWSKI
ART- G. WILDMAN

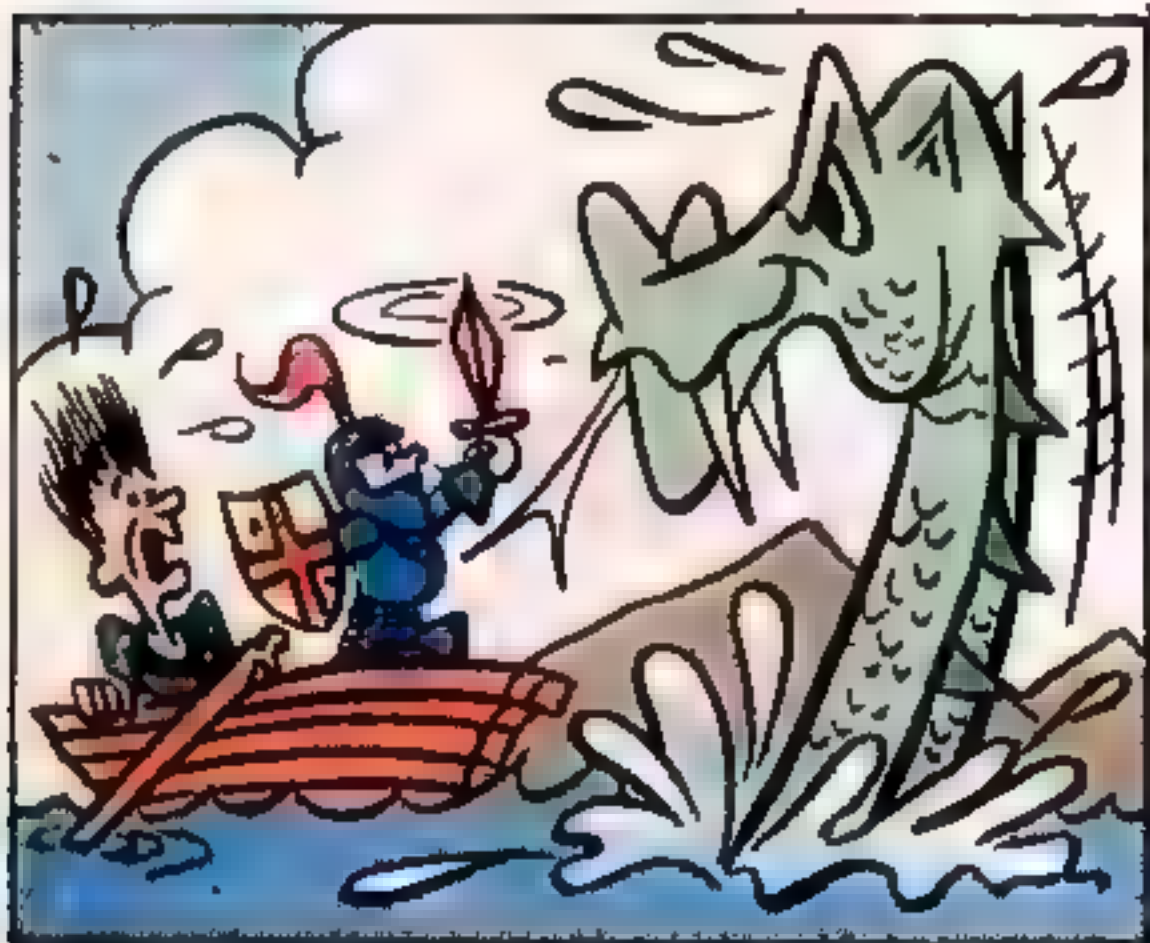

Georgie, the boy knight of the Round Table, had been called into a special meeting with King Arthur. Whenever there was an especially dangerous job to be done, King Arthur summoned Sir Georgie, the Dragon Slayer. Young Sir Georgie was only a boy but he had the courage, strength and valour of a full grown knight. Sir Georgie sat at the Round Table and not even Sir Lancelot questioned the lad's right to be there. All of the knights knew the story of how Sir Georgie had defeated a huge, fire breathing dragon single-handed and earned himself the dignified title of "Dragon Slayer". Ever since the day when Georgie stopped being a squire and became a full-fledged knight by performing that heroic deed, no one questioned his ability as a warrior. Georgie was equal to any knight in combat. When Georgie put on his armor and climbed onto the back of "Charger" his gallant, white steed, he was an enemy to be reckoned with. His strong sword arm was as good as any man's. It was for these reasons that King Arthur had called Georgie into his private, royal chambers.

"You wanted to see me, Sire?" asked Sir Georgie as he bowed his head while addressing his king. "Yes, Dragon Slayer," replied King Arthur. "I have a very important and a very dangerous job for you to do," said the ruler of Camelot. "My sword arm is yours. Tell me what the task is and I shall perform the deed like a brave knight of the Round Table," answered Georgie. "I knew you would pledge yourself to the completion of the quest even before you knew what it was. You're a faithful and chivalrous knight, Georgie." said King Arthur complimenting his youngest warrior.

The Dragon Slayer acknowledged the compliment by smiling and silently bowing his head. "Take your squire, Bragget, and ride to the lake near the Black Forest. The Queen wishes to vacation near that lake. I am told that a man-eating serpent dwells beneath the waters of the Black Lake. It is a huge, scaly creature who devours any man, woman or child that wanders too close to the water's edge. Sir Georgie, your quest is to make the lake safe for Queen Gwenivere by getting rid of the serpent." said the King. "It shall be done." answered Sir Georgie as he saluted his ruler.

Georgie left the king and ordered Bragget, his squire, to make ready for a journey. Bragget, who was a demoted knight, knew which weapons the Dragon Slayer would need. Unfortunately for Sir Bragget, the Squire, he didn't know how to use a single weapon. He was a good talker but a poor fighter. His bragging had gotten him demoted. "Where are we off to?" asked Bragget as he twirled his black, handlebar mustache between his fingertips. "The Black Lake," answered Georgie. Before Bragget could protest, Sir Georgie ordered him to pack a cart with heavy metal anvils attached to long, thick chains. Sir Bragget didn't understand but obeyed the order. All the way to the Black Lake, Sir Bragget tried to talk the Dragon Slayer out of doing battle with the Serpent. He was still protesting when they got there.

Load the chains and anvils into a rowboat. You will row for me." said Georgie as he stepped down from Charger's back. "I ... I ... will ... w-what?" stuttered Bragget. "ROW!" repeated Georgie as he shoved his nervous squire into the boat. They loaded the boat and rowed out onto the lake. It wasn't long before the serpent saw them from its cave under the water. It quickly came to the surface.

"There it is!" shouted Georgie as the scaly beast swam towards them. It had a long, forked tongue and huge gleaming fangs. Sir Bragget covered his eyes as Georgie drew his sword. The serpent splashed in the water near the boat almost capsizing it. Sir Georgie hit the dragon on the head with his sword and knocked the aquatic beast unconscious. He locked the heavy chains and anvils around its body as it floated near the boat. The weight of the heavy iron caused the monster to sink. It would be stuck on the bottom of the lake forever. "Now, it can live out its life on the bottom without harming anyone," said Georgie. "Can I open my eyes now?" asked Squire Bragget. "Yes, open them and row!" laughed Georgie. Sir Bragget opened his eyes and saw the serpent was gone. He looked over the side of the boat and saw the scaly monster in the water below. "Yeew!" he screamed closing his eyes once again. Georgie shook his head and began to row the boat himself.
